

Collegio A Volta

Universita' di Pavia

In the past few years thousands of African Migrants have lost their lives to the Mediterranean Sea during their attempt to reach Europe escaping war, famine, persecution or misery. While these recurring tragedies invariably attract short bursts of media attention, a discussion of the underlying causes is typically absent.

This Volta series addresses the events responsible for this unprecedented African Exodus and queries the role of Europe in the handling of this crisis. In the second lecture Benjamin Page discusses the paths followed by African migrants and their links with the home countries.
