2017 NOHA Winter School in "the Humanitarian-Development Nexus", Pavia – Italy

The second edition of the NOHA Winter School offers a practice-oriented approach to the main key issues, challenges and professional implications concerning the Humanitarian-Development Nexus. The relevance of creating and fostering the nexus has been firmly stated by the European Commission in the 2011 Agenda for Change and by the 2016 World Humanitarian Summit. Nevertheless, a number of unresolved issues are still to be tackled, both on a theoretical and operational perspective.

The Winter School is structured as a five-day course including frontal lessons with the presentation of theory and case studies, free discussion, group works, brainstorm sessions, video presentations. Furthermore, participatory techniques will be adopted to encourage dialogue and attendees' active involvement.

The course faculty includes leading experts from around the humanitarian world (both Non-Governmental and International Organisations), presenting conceptual and practical insights, thus offering participants first-hand experience drawn from major humanitarian emergencies. The Winter School is organized by the University of Pavia, member of the NOHA Network and CISP (International Committee for the Development of Peoples), with the financial support of DG ECHO.
